FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Ridgefield Main Street Hires Executive Director

Ridgefield Main Street, a non-profit organization focusing on downtown revitalization, has hired Marykay Lamoureaux to be its first executive director. Lamoureaux is a past chamber of commerce executive director in a city with a Main Street program.

“This is an exciting step for this group of dedicated volunteers,” Lamoureaux said. “They have been organized and working for several years under the guidelines of the Washington State Main Street program. Successes in fundraising and volunteer participation have resulted in increased visibility and interest in activities. The Board is active and dedicated and I am proud to join the team,” said Lamoureaux.

Judy Hinz, President of the Board of Directors, said, “The Board of Directors conducted an extensive interview process with a number of highly qualified candidates.

Marykay’s experience, knowledge of the organization, and key partnerships made her the ideal choice to take Ridgefield Main Street to our next level.”

“We know that part of what is attracting people to Ridgefield is the charm and potential of the unique downtown area,” Lamoureaux said. “We are focused on the downtown area and we enjoy working with valued partners such as the City of Ridgefield, the Port of Ridgefield, the Ridgefield Business Association and the Ridgefield School Board,” Lamoureaux said. “A thriving downtown brings residents and visitors together to create an attractive environment that builds and supports the local community.”

Ridgefield Main Street is a non-profit organization dedicated to preserving the cultural heritage of downtown Ridgefield, while advocating for its future, by creating excitement and vibrancy downtown, enhancing the look and feel of the business district and nurturing Ridgefield’s sense of community and small town charm.
